Contents

Foreword by Carol Geary Schneider ................................................................. v
Acknowledgments ............................................................................................. vii
Introduction ......................................................................................................... 1

Chapter 1. The Nexus between the Nation’s Twenty-First-Century Needs and Higher Education’s Role in Graduating More Students with High Levels of Achievement ................................................................. 5

Chapter 2. The Realities of Twenty-First-Century American Higher Education ......................... 9

Chapter 3. The Call for “Greater Expectations” for All Twenty-First-Century Students: A Commitment to Achieve Equitable Outcomes ................................................................. 13

Chapter 4. The LEAP Essential Learning Outcomes and the VALUE Rubrics: National Benchmarks for Liberal Learning and Accountability ................................................................. 15

Chapter 5. Developing a Wide-Angle View of Student Learning: Representative Case Studies ................................................................................................................. 23

Chapter 6. The Scalability of VALUE for Multiple Purposes and Audiences .......................... 31

Chapter 7. Claiming the High Ground: Spreading the VALUE Approach to Assessment and Accountability across American Higher Education ................................................................. 41

Appendix A. The Integrative Learning VALUE Rubric ........................................... 44
Appendix B. Salt Lake Community College E-portfolio Requirements .......................... 46
References ......................................................................................................... 48
About the Author ............................................................................................... 51
About VALUE .................................................................................................... 52